Service Interruptions:

911 Outage, San Jose, Santa Clara County (New/Final)

On 04/23/17 at 1445 hours, the California State Warning Center (CSWC) was advised of a potential 911 Outage in the city of San Jose, Santa Clara County.

- The CSWC contacted the Santa Clara County Warning Point. They advised there was a planned outage for the city (Police Department/Fire Department Dispatch) due to moving to an alternate site. The city advised the Warning Point at approximately 1215 hours, that they had moved, however they were having trouble with the 911 system.
- Per the Coastal Duty Officer (CDO), a substation was set up to take calls during the move and the substation experienced a glitch. There was a short term disruption to service that has been taken care of.
- At 1651 hours, the CA 9-1-1 Branch advised:
  - The Public Safety Answering Point (PSAP) relocated to their backup site as planned to accommodate the work. They experienced an issue with the phones to which they had all their calls rerouted at about noon. An AT&T tech was called and placed en route. However, the city decided to change their reroute to the Avaya VoIP phones also located at their backup site.
  - The PSAP answered calls on the Avaya phones and did so for the remainder of the shift.
- Santa Clara County Warning Point advised the PSAP returned to their Communications Center at 2130 hours.

WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

- A few inches of snowfall accumulation will be possible across the higher mountain passes of Northern California today and tonight.
- Gusty winds will affect Southwest California for most of the coming week.
- Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Showers will linger over the region into early Thursday as a couple of small weather systems move through the Geographic Area. Overall the showers will be light, but the heaviest precipitation will be in the northern half of the region, and the NW areas may see a period of rather steady precipitation Wednesday. Showers will be ending Thursday, and Friday through the weekend will be sunny and much warmer. Gusty south to west winds are expected today and again Wednesday, but wind speeds today will be stronger than Wednesday with gusts of 20-30 mph fairly common in the windy spots today. Beginning Thursday night, moderately strong, gusty northerly winds will develop and continue into Saturday as high pressure strengthens over the region. Temperatures will be on an increasing trend this week from 10-15 degrees below normal over the next few days to about 5 degrees above normal Sunday. The warmest inland valley areas will be in the mid 70s to low 80s Sunday.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A dry northwest flow will prevail across the region most of this week with periods of windy conditions across the mountains and deserts. The strongest winds today will be across the Mojave Desert and the eastern side of the Cleveland National Forest where sustained speeds will be in the 20-40 mph range. Lighter winds are expected tomorrow, but it will still be windy, especially across the Tehachapi Range and near the Colorado River. There will be areas of low clouds and fog along the coast, otherwise it will be mostly clear across the region this week. Daytime highs will change little through the week with highs in the 60s to mid-70s across the coastal and valley areas with 50s to upper 60s in the mountains. An offshore flow pattern will emerge Thursday night and into Friday, with gusty north to northeasterly winds developing across the coastal mountains and valleys of Southern California. The offshore flow will continue Saturday with winds diminishing by Sunday. A significant warming trend will develop over all the region this weekend as high pressure from the Pacific builds into California. Daytime highs will climb to well above normal levels by Sunday and Monday.
